Logan County Agriculture

LOGAN COUNTY is essentially a grain-raising section. The great bulk of its farmers—perhaps between 80 and 85 per cent—market most of their crops through the elevator. Livestock feeding and growing is not a popular industry, taking the county as a whole, though there are areas here and there where the stock business has a fairly strong local hold.

Logan county is on the south border of the far-famed Illinois corn belt. The general lay of the land is much the same as McLean, eastern Tazewell, DeWitt and other border counties. Most of it is practically level, some of it is just gently rolling, and only a comparatively small area is rough or hilly. The north part of the county is the Wisconsin glaciation, the end of which comes about on a line drawn east and west 10 miles north of Lincoln, the county seat, or about through Union. At this point is the terminal moraine of this soil area. The rest of the county belongs to the Illinois glaciation. The Illinois glaciation is from 60 to 100 feet lower than the Wisconsin, and there is a little rough land along the moraine.

There are no important rivers in Logan county, the only streams being the creeks. Most of these creeks are bordered with trees, but aside from this there is no timbered area in the county, the rest being a treeless prairie. Along these streams are also some hills, but not enough to make a considerable part of the county's area.

The bulk of Logan county's soils belong to the brown silt loam classification, or the common type of the Illinois corn-belt. Mixed through this brown silt loam are considerable areas of black clay loam, an extremely rich and productive type of soil which is found all through the cornbelt also. The timbered sections of the county and almost all sections that were once timbered, are timber soil. There are also some small areas of minor importance of gray silt loam.

On most Logan county soils there is a marked deficiency of phosphorus, analyses showing from 900 to 1,200 pounds per acre. A few farmers are experimenting with raw rock phosphate in a small way to supply this deficiency, but thus far little systematic soil improvement work has been carried on. A few men here and there are using limestone. Five years ago very few soils in Logan county were sour, but now almost all of them show an acid reaction.

The common rotation of the county is corn and oats, or corn and wheat. Clover has not come into the use that it has in McLean or Livingston or the other nearby counties. Most clover not used for livestock feeding is plowed under the fall after it is sowed, or early the following spring, and only a limited number of fields are left the second year to be plowed down then. Alfalfa is not at all common, though here and there farmers are growing it successfully.

It is through its Shire horse-breeding industry that Logan county is most noted in a livestock way. Centering around Mt. Pulaski the Shire business has attained a magnitude as great as in any section of Illinois. This booming industry finds expression in the Mt. Pulaski Horse Show, held in October each year. This has grown in the last four or five years to be the largest local horse show in Illinois, excepting alone the Bushnell Horse Show in McDonough county. The size of the horse show rivals that at the State Fair and the International, most of the horses coming from the south half of Logan county, but some from beyond the border from Sangamon, Christian, DeWitt and Macon.

A good percentage of these Shire horses are purebred, and most of the stallions in the good horse county in Logan county are purebred Shires. Since the Mt. Pulaski Horse Show was started there is a noticeable quickening of interest in the purebred Shire business, as these good horses have had a way of winning most of the prizes at the show. The Mt. Pulaski show really has had a profound influence in improving the draft horse business of the county. There are a few Percherons, but not many, and practically no representatives of the other draft breeds.

Around Elkhart is a considerable

Many times you have read an advertisement in Prairie Farmer of something you would like to buy, but you did not know where to find the store that sold it. You decided to look for this article when you were next in town and you tried several stores without finding it. Then you gave up in disgust. A two-cent stamp or a postcard addressed to the manufacturer saying "Please advise me who handles your goods in my town. If you have no dealer in my town, give me the name and address of your nearest dealer", would get you accurate information by return mail. Try it. It works and saves time.
